SOLUTION 03 / OVERVIEW

Forensic Criminology and Court Services

Bring relevant human context into the court process with care and professional independence.

Court matters involve people, circumstances and consequences that require careful examination. Cybareti provides forensic criminology support, including pre-sentence reports, assistance with victim impact statements and related court attendance by arrangement. The work is tailored to the matter, the instructions and the relevant professional remit.

Who this is for

Attorneys instructing on a matter, and individuals or families seeking appropriate support through their legal representative. The attorney of record is the primary commissioning contact for court-related work.

When this service helps

Prepare for sentencing. Develop an individualised criminological assessment of relevant personal history, circumstances and matters requiring the court's consideration.

Explain the impact of an offence. Support the preparation of a victim impact statement that clearly communicates the person's own experience and its consequences.

Explore a defined professional question. Assess relevant behavioural, contextual or rehabilitation considerations within the practitioner's competence and agreed scope.

Support the court process. Arrange professional briefing or court attendance where required, subject to instructions, availability and the needs of the matter.

How we approach the work

We clarify the instructions, examine relevant records and conduct appropriate interviews. Information is assessed in context and corroborated where possible. Independent professional findings remain distinct from advocacy and from the personal account contained in a victim impact statement.

Clear, relevant and carefully supported material that assists the legal team and the court.

What you receive

A scope shaped around your needs

Pre-sentence report. A matter-specific criminological report addressing the agreed questions and relevant circumstances, with its evidential basis and limitations identified.

Victim impact statement support. Assistance to structure and articulate a personal account of impact, preserving the individual's voice and distinguishing it from expert opinion.

Supporting assessment material. Relevant interview information, reviewed records, corroboration and outstanding gaps reflected appropriately in the commissioned work.

Professional briefing or attendance. Discussion with the instructing attorney and, when separately agreed, attendance connected to the commissioned report or service.

The service supports the legal process; it does not replace legal advice or promise a particular court outcome. Any specialist input outside the practitioner's remit must be separately considered and arranged.

How to engage

01 Confirm the matter. Provide the service required, jurisdiction, matter stage, attorney's details and relevant court dates.

02 Agree instructions and timing. Confirm suitability, information requirements, interviews, deliverables and any attendance before the work begins.

03 Prepare and review. Complete the assessment or statement support, address material gaps and coordinate delivery with the instructing attorney.

Start a conversation

Enquire as early as possible with the matter stage and court dates. Sensitive case material should follow through the agreed confidential intake process.
